CONCEPT

One Dot, Your Whole Look

ANGLE

The Color That Pulls It Together: Using one color family across lips and cheeks can make a quick look feel intentional without extra planning.

VOICE

Creator

Use a creator image with a real, approachable everyday makeup look. The creator visually demonstrates the idea; the static does not need an unsupported testimonial.

FORMAT - write Static + [Execution Pattern]

Static + Color-Connection Portrait

One close portrait shows the same selected color on cheeks and lips. A subtle visual color path connects the cheek and lip result to the product packshot.

REFERENCE AD - explain what execution traits we are adapting.

No reference ad supplied.

Use an original execution built for fast comprehension: one face, one product, one short headline, clear whitespace, and a strong visual connection between the color on the face and the product.

SCRIPT / COPY

Use one headline per variant. Each headline leads into the same core message.

Element	Copy
HEADLINE / HOOK 1	One color can make the whole look feel more intentional.
HEADLINE / HOOK 2	Your blush and lip color can work together.
HEADLINE / HOOK 3	One shade. A more pulled-together look.

VISUAL DIRECTIONS

Canvas: 4:5 vertical static, 1080 × 1350 px.

Main image: Use one close, well-lit portrait. The chosen Gel Splash shade should be visibly present on both cheeks and lips.

Persona cues: Natural-looking base makeup, everyday styling, relaxed expression, simple background. The image should feel like a realistic getting-ready moment, not a high-fashion campaign.

Headline placement: Upper-left quadrant. Keep it to three lines maximum. Use Hook 1 as the first test.

Headline treatment: Large bold sans-serif type, approximately 68-82 px at 1080 px width. Use deep plum, black, or another high-contrast brand-approved dark color.

Text shape: Keep text unboxed if the background is clean. If needed for readability, place it on a soft off-white panel with generous padding; do not use a heavy banner.

Product placement: Bottom-right quadrant. Show the current, verified Gel Splash packshot upright and large enough to identify quickly.

Color connection: Add one soft translucent color stroke or visual path from the product toward the cheek and lip color. This should communicate “one shade across the look,” not imply a performance claim.

Core-message placement: Small, short text directly below the headline or near the product: “One color for cheeks and lips.”

Proof/supporting element: Do not add ratings, testimonials, wear claims, before-and-after imagery, badges, or ingredient claims. The supported element is the clear product category: “Lip & Cheek Stain.”

Offer placement: Place the verified product name below or beside the packshot. Do not add price or discount unless confirmed.

Whitespace: Keep at least 25% of the image clear. Do not add separate icons, benefit lists, or multiple product packs.

Emotional effect: Calm, polished, easy, and intentional. The ad should make the viewer feel that coordinated color is a simple choice.

VISUAL HIERARCHY

1. First thing the viewer should notice: The headline: “One color can make the whole look feel more intentional.”

2. Second thing: The matching cheek-and-lip color on the creator's face.

3. Third thing: The Lucky Beauty Gel Splash Lip & Cheek Stain packshot and “Shop now” CTA.
