Meta Video Creative Brief | One Dot, Your Whole Look

HYPOTHESIS - why this direction may be worth testing.

A quick-fresh-look buyer may respond to the idea that matching her lip and cheek color can make her makeup feel more intentional without adding separate product choices. This is supported by thin-to-moderate research showing value in fewer-step, multi-use routines and the desire for “effortless, everyday looks.”

Important: The research also shows that strong pigment can create a technique burden. Production must confirm the correct amount and application method for the current product before filming.

DESIRE - the human experience or outcome the persona wants.

A fresh, coordinated look that feels put together without a long routine or a full makeup bag.

PERSONA - who this specific ad is for.

The quick-fresh-look buyer: someone who wants coordinated lip and cheek color with fewer products and less planning.

OFFER - what we are asking them to buy or do.

Shop Lucky Beauty Gel Splash Lip & Cheek Stain.

Production check required: Confirm the current SKU, shade names, availability, price, and brand-approved application guidance before filming.

AWARENESS - Unaware, Problem-Aware, Solution-Aware, Product-Aware, or Most Aware.

Solution-Aware

She already knows lip-and-cheek products exist. The ad shows why using one color can make her routine feel more coordinated.

CONCEPT - the big creative idea.

One Dot, Your Whole Look

ANGLE - how we plan to persuade.

The Color That Pulls It Together: Using one color family across lips and cheeks can make a quick look feel intentional without extra planning.

VOICE - who should deliver the message and why they are believable.

Creator

A creator can show the practical routine change in real time: one color used across lips and cheeks. Their role is to demonstrate the idea clearly, not to make unverified performance claims.

FORMAT - how the message comes alive.

A close-up creator routine demo in clear natural lighting. The visual progression moves from separate product choices to one selected Lucky Beauty color applied across cheeks and lips. Use tight product, applicator, face, and final-look shots, changing the visual every two to three seconds.

REFERENCE AD, IF ANY - borrow execution traits only, such as pacing, framing, camera style, editing, visual rhythm, or production treatment.

None supplied.

SCRIPT

All three hooks lead into the same shared body.

Script	Visual directions
HOOK 1: “One color can make the whole look feel more intentional.”	Creator faces camera with a simple, unfinished base. On-screen text: “One color. Whole look.” Cut to the selected Gel Splash product.
HOOK 2: “Your blush and lip color do not have to be two separate decisions.”	Split-frame or quick sequence: creator holds two separate products, then puts them aside and holds one Gel Splash product.
HOOK 3: “A fresh look is easier when the colors already make sense together.”	Close-up of the selected shade beside the creator’s face. Show the product, shade label, and applicator.
BODY: “Start with one color. Add it to your cheeks. Then bring the same color to your lips. You are not trying to add more makeup. You are making the look feel like it belongs together.”	Show one small, brand-approved amount placed on the cheek. Cut to blending. Cut to lip application. Use close-ups so viewers can see the same color story across both areas. On-screen text, one phrase at a time: “Cheeks.” “Lips.” “One color story.”
BODY: “Lucky Beauty Gel Splash Lip & Cheek Stain gives you one color to start with, so your quick look feels more pulled together.”	Product beauty shot beside the finished lip-and-cheek result. Show the packaging and current shade name only if verified.
CTA: “Pick your shade and shop Lucky Beauty Gel Splash Lip & Cheek Stain.”	Creator holds the product beside the finished look. End card: product, verified shade name, official shop destination, and “Shop now.”

PRE-PRODUCTION CHECKS

- Confirm that the selected Gel Splash shade is current and in stock.
- Confirm the brand-approved amount and application method; do not assume “one dot” is the correct amount for this SKU.
- Do not claim the product is foolproof, long-wearing, humidity-proof, or suitable for areas beyond lips and cheeks unless the brand can verify those claims.

Evidence note: Customer evidence is small and directional. “Effortless, everyday looks” is exact language captured in the research pack; it is not a broad market claim.
