AUTHORSHIP NOTE

This worksheet was completed with AI assistance at the user's request. The course worksheet labels Direction 1 as a hand-built exercise; the submitter should personally rewrite, validate and own that direction before representing it as hand-built.

DIRECTION 1 - THE RESEARCH HALF

Presentable, Not Painted Over

A product-specific direction for the concealer-first daily wearer.

RESEARCH FINDING

Two independent reviewers support lightweight, everyday Serum Concealer use. One reported manageable transfer during a gym session. Another preferred its “smooth, lightweight, and very dewy and healthy-looking on the skin” finish and used concealer plus powder instead of a full base. The evidence does not support universal sweat-proof, humidity-proof or no-cake claims.

INSIGHT

For this buyer, more coverage is not automatically a better result. She wants enough correction to look presentable while retaining the comfort and appearance of real skin. The product competes with the perceived need for a full foundation routine.

BUYER SEGMENT

Presentable, but still looks like skin. Buyers who want under-eye or blemish correction without committing to a heavy full-face base.

PERSONA

The concealer-first daily wearer. She has tried foundations, tinted moisturizers or matte concealers. Her preferred everyday routine is concealer plus powder: shorter, breathable and sufficient for ordinary wear.

PERSONA GAP

No clear persona gap identified. The research did not include a verified audit of Lucky Beauty's current paid advertising.

DESIRE

Look evenly put together while still seeing and feeling like her own skin. Keep natural-looking polish, breathable comfort and routine control; lose heavy base feel, cakiness and unnecessary layers.

Offer, stages and concept

OFFER

Lucky Beauty Serum Concealer, with Skin Blur Powder Foundation as an optional supporting step where additional evening or setting is needed. Credibly supported: lightweight feel, buildable light-to-medium coverage, a dewy/skin-like finish and use in a shorter routine. Before production, verify that the current formula matches the reviewed version and confirm current shades, ingredients, fill size and pricing.

AWARENESS STAGE

Solution-aware moving into product-aware. The persona already understands concealer, powder, foundation, tinted moisturizer, shade matching and setting. Reviewers compare finishes, tools, coverage, comfort and undertones; the task is to show why this specific product fits her preferred trade-off.

MARKET SOPHISTICATION STAGE

Stage 4: mechanism and proof competition, medium confidence. Competitors already claim lightweight coverage, hydration, blendability, buildability, skin-supporting ingredients, shade systems and climate suitability. The direction therefore needs specific application and lived-result proof, not another adjective list.

CONCEPT

PRESENTABLE, NOT PAINTED OVER.

Everyday base becomes selective correction rather than complete facial coverage. The product addresses what the persona wants corrected while leaving the rest of her skin visible.

ANGLE

Contrarian Truth. Challenge the assumption that looking properly put together requires more coverage, more layers or a full foundation routine. This fits a solution-aware buyer who knows the alternatives and a Stage 4 market where a clear product philosophy plus proof is stronger than generic benefit language.

DIRECTION 1 - THE CREATIVE HALF

Hooks, voice and format

HOOK 1 / CONTRARIAN

“A better everyday base doesn’t have to cover your whole face.”

HOOK 2 / QUESTION

“Can concealer and powder be enough to feel ready?”

HOOK 3 / PROBLEM

“When your everyday base feels heavier than your day needs, it’s too much.”

VOICE

Customer. A genuine concealer-first wearer has the most believable right to explain the coverage-versus-comfort trade-off because the research support comes from people using the product inside their own routines.

FORMAT

Close-range routine demonstration with an elapsed-time check. Show starting skin, exact shade, application areas, product amount, tool, optional powder and a later check-in under consistent lighting. The buyer's questions concern visible finish, shade and wear, so verbal claims alone are insufficient.

WHY THIS DESERVES TO BE PRODUCED

This direction has the clearest chain from independent customer evidence to a named buyer, specific product and documented trade-off. It gives familiar lightweight/buildable benefits a sharper job: helping someone look presentable without defaulting to a full base.

EVIDENCE CONFIDENCE

MEDIUM. Two credible contributors support the central experience, but evidence is narrow and largely launch-era. Current formula equivalence, representative review distribution, repeat purchase and shade outcomes remain unverified.

DIRECTION 2 - THE RESEARCH HALF

Luck You Can Put On

A founder-led identity direction built from the brand's most distinctive existing meaning.

RESEARCH FINDING

Lucky Beauty consistently links makeup with luck, readiness and self-direction. The founder described makeup as a “wearable lucky charm.” Meanwhile, lightweight, hydrating, blendable, buildable, long-wearing and multi-use language repeats throughout the competitor set. Customer ownership of the luck association has not been proven.

INSIGHT

In a category where brands make similar functional promises, Lucky Beauty's strongest distinction may be the meaning attached to putting makeup on. The opportunity is to make the brand the small getting-ready marker between not ready and ready - without suggesting that makeup changes someone's fortune.

BUYER SEGMENT

One product, quick fresh look. Buyers who want an everyday routine with fewer products, coordinated color and less preparation.

PERSONA

The quick-fresh-look shopper. She already understands everyday and multi-use makeup and wants a brief routine. The possibility that she wants a symbolic ritual is an inference, not an established buyer trait.

PERSONA GAP

No clear persona gap identified. No verified current-ad audit was available.

DESIRE

The supported functional desire is to look fresh through a brief, manageable routine. The deeper desire to begin feeling ready and intentional is a brand-led hypothesis that still requires customer validation.

DIRECTION 2 - CONTINUED

Offer, stages and concept

OFFER

Current, verified Lucky Beauty hero products unified by the founder's wearable-lucky-charm story. This is not a new performance benefit. Confirm which SKUs are current, central and available before selecting products. Keep luck symbolic; do not imply guaranteed outcomes, wellbeing effects or unverified SKU performance.

AWARENESS STAGE

Brand-aware and product-aware. Marketplace following, ratings, sold-count bands and product-specific review activity indicate audiences that can recognize Lucky Beauty and at least some of its products. The task is to give familiar products a more distinctive organizing meaning.

MARKET SOPHISTICATION STAGE

Stage 4: mechanism and proof competition, medium confidence. GRWM, Issy, Colourette and blk use similar functional promises while adding ingredients, shades, application guidance and climate context. An identity system can differentiate, but it cannot replace SKU-level proof.

CONCEPT

LUCK YOU CAN PUT ON.

Lucky Beauty becomes the visible getting-ready marker through which the persona chooses how she wants to enter what comes next. Luck is a personal symbol, not a promised outcome.

ANGLE

Identity. Invite the buyer to see Lucky Beauty as part of how she prepares herself, rather than another interchangeable list of makeup benefits. This fits a brand/product-aware audience and a Stage 4 market where a coherent identity can carry memory while performance remains product-specific.

DIRECTION 2 - THE CREATIVE HALF

Hooks, voice and format

HOOK 1 / FOUNDER STORY

“Lucky Beauty started with one idea: makeup can be a wearable lucky charm.”

HOOK 2 / POV

“POV: getting ready is the moment you choose how to enter the day.”

HOOK 3 / QUESTION

“What are you putting on for luck today?”

VOICE

Founder. Andrea Brillantes has the most believable right to introduce the idea because the wearable-lucky-charm meaning comes from the founder story. Using a customer as the primary messenger would imply customer ownership that the research has not established.

FORMAT

Founder-led brand narrative anchored in visible product application. Explain the origin and intended meaning of the lucky-charm idea while showing current products being used in a real getting-ready sequence. A purely abstract manifesto would separate the story from the offer.

WHY THIS DESERVES TO BE PRODUCED

This is the most distinctive brand territory in the research and is credible for the founder to articulate. It creates a memory structure competitors' familiar functional claims do not provide, but should first be treated as a brand hypothesis to validate.

EVIDENCE CONFIDENCE

MEDIUM. The territory is strongly grounded in the founder story and differentiated from the reviewed competitor messaging. Confidence is not high because customers did not independently use, recall or value the lucky-charm idea in the accessible evidence.

SCORE YOUR SIX HOOKS

5C check

Each hook is scored from 1 to 5 for Clear, Connected, Curious, Concrete and Credible.

DIR / HOOK	THE HOOK	CLR	CONN	CURI	CONC	CRED	/25
1 - H1	A better everyday base doesn't have to cover your whole face.	5	5	4	4	4	22
1 - H2	Can concealer and powder be enough to feel ready?	5	5	4	4	4	22
1 - H3	When your everyday base feels heavier than your day needs, it's too much.	5	4	3	3	4	19
2 - H1	Lucky Beauty started with one idea: makeup can be a wearable lucky charm.	5	4	4	4	5	22
2 - H2	POV: getting ready is the moment you choose how to enter the day.	4	4	4	3	3	18
2 - H3	What are you putting on for luck today?	5	4	4	3	4	20

SCORING NOTES

1-H1 and 1-H2: strongest because both express the researched full-base trade-off clearly. Neither receives 5 for credibility until the current formula and wider customer pattern are verified.

1-H3: clear but less curious and less concrete; it could apply to several complexion brands.

2-H1: highly credible in founder voice because it accurately states the documented brand origin.

2-H2: lower credibility because choosing how to enter the day is an interpretation, not customer language.

2-H3: concise and connected to the concept, but "luck" remains abstract until the visual/product context supplies meaning.

CORRECTION NOTE

Direction 2

What the AI output got wrong or left too loose, and what changed before completing this worksheet.

AREA	WHAT WAS WRONG OR MISSING	WHAT I CHANGED
Persona	The AI called her a “ritual-led everyday makeup user,” which treated an interpretation as an established trait.	Renamed her the quick-fresh-look shopper. Kept symbolic ritual as an explicit inference.
Desire	Functional and emotional desires were blended together.	Separated the supported brief-routine desire from the unproven readiness/intentionality hypothesis.
Offer	The full makeup range was treated as one coherent offer without confirming current hero SKUs.	Restricted the direction to current, verified hero products and added a required availability/product check.
Concept boundary	Luck could be read as promising an outcome.	Specified that luck is symbolic and cannot imply fortune, wellbeing or unverified performance.
Hook 2	The original POV risked treating self-direction as observed customer language.	Kept it as a POV expression and lowered its credibility score to reflect the inference.
Hook 3	The earlier morning-specific version assumed a repeated morning occasion the research did not establish.	Changed it to “What are you putting on for luck today?” and removed the unsupported frequency cue.
Confidence	High distinctiveness could have been mistaken for high evidence.	Kept evidence confidence at MEDIUM and stated the exact research needed to raise it.

CORE CORRECTION
The corrected direction no longer claims customers already experience Lucky Beauty as a ritual. The founder is introducing a brand meaning for customer validation; she is not repeating a proven customer belief.

THE DECISION

Which direction should be produced first?

MY PICK

DIRECTION 1 - PRESENTABLE, NOT PAINTED OVER.

WHY THIS ONE

Direction 1 has the strongest traceable chain from independent customer experience to a specific product, buyer trade-off and demonstrable execution. It can be tested after a contained formula/claim verification step. Direction 2 is more distinctive at brand level, but customer ownership of the luck association is still unproven; producing it at scale before validation risks testing a founder idea rather than a customer-relevant idea.

WHAT WOULD CHANGE MY MIND

I would pick Direction 2 first if customer interviews or association research showed that buyers independently connect Lucky Beauty with luck, readiness or self-direction; if the association was distinct from competitors; and if controlled message testing improved brand attribution or consideration. Conversely, weak current-formula reviews or poor repeat purchase for Serum Concealer would reduce the case for Direction 1.

PRODUCTION CONDITIONS

DIRECTION	NEXT ACTION BEFORE PRODUCTION	STATUS
Direction 1	Verify current Serum Concealer formula, claims, shades and product availability; define an honest demonstration protocol.	ADVANCE FIRST
Direction 2	Validate customer association with the lucky-charm idea and confirm current hero SKUs.	VALIDATE, THEN ADVANCE
Climate / Brow Grip alternatives	Conduct formal wear/product testing or fix the offer before developing creative.	DO NOT PRODUCE YET

THREE MAIN TAKEAWAYS

What this mission changed

1. DISTINCTIVE IS NOT THE SAME AS SUPPORTED

"Luck You Can Put On" is the more ownable brand idea, but the research only proves that the founder uses the meaning. It does not prove customer ownership. That distinction keeps Direction 2 at MEDIUM confidence.

2. STAGE 4 REWARDS SPECIFIC PROOF

Lightweight, hydrating, blendable and buildable are category minimums. Direction 1 becomes stronger only when it shows a specific amount, shade, application choice and later result rather than repeating those adjectives.

3. CREATIVE CANNOT REPAIR AN OFFER PROBLEM

Brow Grip's applicator/hold concerns and the absence of formal climate proof should not be rewritten into persuasive messaging. Product review, testing or repositioning must come first.

FINAL DECLARATIONS

CHECK	ANSWER
Two completed directions	YES
Six hooks scored with the 5C check	YES
Direction 2 correction note	YES - seven substantive changes
One direction selected for first production	YES - Direction 1
Persona gap claimed without ad audit	NO
Unverified climate or universal wear claim introduced	NO
